GODZILLA X KONG: THE NEW EMPIRE 2024" is a highly anticipated movie that celebrates the life and legacy of the legendary musician, Bob Marley.

As the members of Monarch, the secretive scientific monitoring organization, look on, it appears that Kong is doing well in his newfound home of Hollow Earth. Sure, there are crowds of gigantic, slaving beasts to take on and rip into goopy chunks (and no Kongette to be found as of yet), but Hollow Earth seems to fit the big guy to a T.

As for Godzilla, well, that atomic belching wonder stays closer to Earth's surface. He either sleeps peacefully beneath the ocean depths or swims up to deal with any Titan dangers he happens to sense. So, that's a manageable situation.

Life for Dr. Ilene Andrews isn't going too badly either. Jia, her adopted daughter, is having a hard time fitting in with other kids at school. But that's not difficult to understand. The girl is the deaf, last living member of the Iwi tribe from Kong's Skull Island, after all. Jumping from that world into the routines of a human high school is no easy task.

That's when all, uh, Hollow Earth breaks loose.

Strange electronic signal spikes start emanating from that place, sending Monarch's instruments into a fuzzy tizzy. Those signals are also invading Jia's dreams and giving her odd visions of massive creatures and destruction. But worse than all that, those spiked signals have gotten Godzilla all stirred up as well.

In fact, once Godzilla hits a nuclear power plant and drains it of all its radioactive energy, it becomes apparent that the giant reptile is purposely supercharging his atomic supply for some reason.

So, what is going on? Ilene wonders. The signals are definitely coming from Hollow Earth. And Jia says she thinks it's actually a call for help. That's a scary proposition.

What could be seeking help could in a land filled with gigantic deadly creatures? And what possibly be dangerous enough to frighten any person or thing living there? For that matter, how does the supercharging Godzilla fit into the equation?

It looks like Ilene will have to put together a crew, grab Monarch's latest tech and dive down into Hollow Earth out for herself. She can't help but think, though, that something bad is afoot.
